A Brief History of the Fergussons

A Fergus who lived in Ireland about 450 A.D is credited by medieval historians as the founder of Scotland's monarchy. By 500 A.D. the Scots under King Fergus Mor had left Northern Ireland and became established in Dalriada, now Argyll.

The name Ferguson is an Anglicization of the Gaelic "MacFhearghus", son of Fergus, a personal name of old Celtic origin. Different branches of Fergusons developed. The "Tract on the Men of Albyn", one of the oldest documents of ancient Scottish history lists Fergusson. "Some writers believe the Fergussons had their day as a powerful clan prior to the 13th century and became dispersed from Argyll (Dalriada) as the Scots spread into other parts of Scotland. Of the Highland Fergusons, those from Argyll, held the estate of Glenshellich and were hereditary sheriffs of Strachur, following the Campbells. In Perthshire, there were Fergusons in Atholl and Balquhider who in keeping with many of their neighbouring clans (e.g. MacGregors) were of constant trouble to the King's authority. However many Perthshire Fergusons were strong supporters of the Stuart cause and fought under Montrose, Bonnie Dundee and with the Atholl Brigade at Culloden. On the other hand, many of those from Argyll, Aberdeenshire and the Lowlands supported the Hanoverian cause often fighting opposite their namesakes. Although the Fergussons of Kilkerran were technically Lowland and unrelated to the Highland Fergusons, the head of the family began to be regarded as senior from the 18th century onwards. Today Fergusson of Kilkerran is regarded as chief of the whole name.

Highland Fergussons - Exodus from Scotland to North America

From 1790 to 1850 the Fergussons, and most of their fellow Highlanders, were driven off their lands after the introduction of sheep into the Highlands (the Highland Clearances). Many lost their Clan territories and migrated to the cities, south to England and to Ireland. Those left in the Highlands were generally reduced to poverty and many earned their livelihood by collecting kelp (seaweed) from the coastline or from other menial tasks foreign to the Highlanders. Understandably many of the sailing ships that left Scotland during this period contained many Fergussons who chose to join earlier Highland and Lowland emigrants to Canada and North America - locations where the customs of Scotland, the tartan and the pipes, and the heritage of their forebears could be exercised freely.

Lowland Fergussons - Exodus from Scotland to Ireland to North America

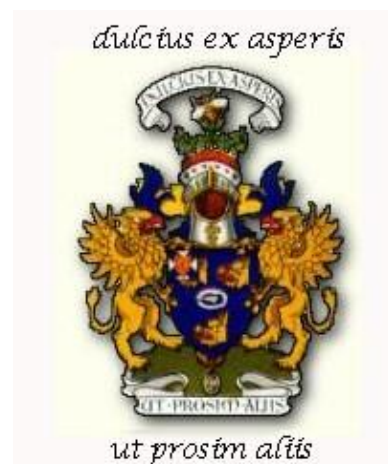

The Scots-Irish (sometimes erroneously called "Scotch-Irish"; "Scotch" being a drink, not a culture) are not in fact Irish at all, except by an accident of geography. Their origins actually lie primarily in the Lowlands of Scotland where they were known for their fighting prowess. Beginning in 1609 King James VI of Scotland started relocating these Scots to Northern Ireland to bring peace to their native Anglo-Scottish border country and also to use them as fighting men to suppress the native Irish. A second wave of Scots moved from Scotland to Northern Ireland in 1689. Beginning in 1718, just a few generations after arriving in Ireland originally, droughts and rising rents brought about a mass exodus of these Ulster-Scots to North America. Although they spread throughout the frontier areas of the American Colonies and Canada, ultimately the majority of them settled in the American South, especially in the Appalachians. During the American Revolution, the Scots-Irish were among the most determined adherents of the rebel cause and their frontier skills were instrumental in destroying the British army in numerous campaigns. So effective were they that George Washington said of them that if the cause was lost everywhere else he would take his last stand among the Scots-Irish of his native Virginia.

“In times like these of rapid and bewildering change, political, social and scientific, many of us feel the need of something solid and unchanging to which we can cling. It is partly to this feeling that I ascribe the recent remarkable growth in many countries of the Scottish clan societies. For most of us it is our family that we regard as the ultimate unassailable stronghold of protection, love and comradeship, and a clan is a larger family still. Nor everyone of Scottish descent belongs to a clan so we who do are fortunate. A clan has roots far back in history and branches that spread beyond ever barrier of country, class or creed. I hope the Clan Fergusson Society of North America will continue to increase; for a clan society helps to raw clan folk into closer relationship and stronger recognition of the traditions of loyalty and service, which the world never needed more than it does today.” (The late Sir James Fergusson of Kilkerran, 8th Baronet, April, 1973)
